About the Lookingglass Theatre Company...

The Lookingglass Theatre is committed to the belief that early drama education fosters a lifelong love for the arts and prepares the individual to perform with confidence and self-respect when meeting life's challenges.

Based in Chicago, the ensemble-driven Lookingglass Theatre Company is committed to the principle that theater can and should be a potent means of discovery and personal and social transformation. Lookingglass is dedicated to developing and producing ambitious world premieres that move beyond theater's traditional boundaries. In addition, the company offers dynamic arts and education programming designed to foster a life-long love of the arts, preparing young people to face life's challenges with confidence and self-respect. Their work - on stage and in the classroom - strives to reflect the full spectrum of the human condition, celebrate the senses and fire the imagination and leave audiences and students changed, charged and empowered.

In June of 2003, Lookingglass Theatre Company opened the doors of its new home in the Water Tower Works Building and ushered in a new era of theater in Chicago. Designed by Morris Architects/Planners, Inc., the project involved the conversion of existing space within this landmark to a flexible state-of-the-art performance facility housing two theaters.
